

Check Out These Five Reasons Not To Delay Your Decision.

One common refrain we hear from many residents: “I wish I’d moved in sooner.” The decision to move into a retirement community is momentous, and shouldn’t be taken lightly; however, putting the decision off too long can come at the expense of emotional and physical wellness, finances and more. We’ve all heard the reasons why older adults should move to a senior living community, but the reasons to move in early are a little more subtle, though no less important. Here are just a few reasons why delaying your move could be the wrong move:

1. It means peace of mind for your loved ones.

Searching for a community under a time constraint, usually as the result of a hospitalization, can bring possible stress to yourself and your loved ones. Moving to The Pines at Davidson means you won’t have to make another move should your needs change. A full continuum of care means a home for life, and, for those who care about you, there will be no need to worry about any uncertainties.

2. You get your money’s worth.

Delaying your decision could mean missed opportunities, on campus and off. Our community’s services and amenities are yours to enjoy, but if you wait until health problems arise, some may be out of reach. While there’s no shortage of activities and events for our assisted living and long-term care residents, choosing to make the move early ensures you everything our community has to offer.

3. Socialization is especially important as we age.

The U.S. Census estimated the overall share of adults aged 65+ living alone has moved up (from 9.4% to 11.1%) between 2010 and 2020; senior isolation is increasing. One of the best parts of a retirement community is right there in the name: the community! Close-knit neighborhoods and shared identity among residents create easy friendships that last a lifetime. Isolation is increasingly understood as more than an emotional issue; it is a social problem with a heavy physical toll. Being able to establish relationships early on will pay off in the event that health care needs arise in the future.

4. Enjoy a smooth transition.

Being young is the perfect time to make the move because the longer you wait, the harder it can be to adjust to new surroundings. Relocation Stress Syndrome, a condition that can manifest as anxiety, agitation and confusion, is more often experienced in adults of advanced age than their younger counterparts. You can avoid unnecessary stress by moving in while you're relatively young and healthy.

5. It's the healthier choice.

The well-known adage turns out to be true: an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. An example can be found in the health and wellness programs in which our residents participate. In particular, the fitness programs for our independent living residents are designed not just to maintain current levels of strength, but to build upon and improve it throughout their lives. Joining our community while you still have your health is a great first step toward preserving it.
